CST Hits Mainstream Media Again During "Awareness Month"

CNN News and TIME magazine have joined the list of mainstream media to tout the potential benefits of CranioSacral Therapy. In April — CST Awareness Month — Dr. John Upledger was highlighted as an innovator in the field of health and medicine. Get the whole story at www.time.com/innovators. Therapists Enjoy A Mind Odyssey at Beyond the Dura 2001

John E. Upledger, DO, OMM, developer of CranioSacral Therapy, brought together more than 35 distinguished speakers to explore diverse issues of complementary care at the highly successful "Beyond the Dura 2001: A Mind Odyssey." The 7th biennial international research conference sponsored by The Upledger Foundation was held at the Jupiter Beach Resort in Jupiter, Fla., April 25-29, 2001. More than 300 people gathered from around the world to discuss such far-reaching topics as cellular consciousness, the healing power of the cello, and the use of complementary techniques on pediatric heart-surgery patients.

Dr. John Upledger Gives Cells A Voice

In a presentation titled "Cell Talk," Dr. Upledger unveiled his own theories on the consciousness of individual cells, and how that understanding could lead to more effective therapy. After years of research in the area of cellular biology, he concluded that each cell may have its own consciousness, much like an individual person. He went on to encourage therapists who dialogue with clients to remain open to the possibility of communicating with cells, or groups of cells that may respond like families with their own set of interrelated dynamics. Dr. Upledger believes that, by communicating on this minute level, the therapist can receive highly specific information about disease processes and how to help the body heal.

Dee Ahern, RPT, enjoys a warm thank you from Dr. Upledger after winning an auction for a monogrammed lab coat he wore while developing CranioSacral Therapy. Proceeds benefit The Upledger Foundation.

Keynote Addresses Crucial Importance of Attitudinal Healing

Drs. Gerald Jampolsky and Diane Cirincione presented the 12 Principles of Attitudinal Healing in their conference keynote address. Internationally recognized authors, lecturers and consultants, they shared stories of their inspirational work with children and adults suffering from catastrophic illnesses. They also discussed the dynamics of forgiveness Dr. Jampolsky highlighted in his latest book, Forgiveness: The Greatest Healer of All.

Wine Tasting and Silent Auction Benefit Nonprofit Foundation Programs

The conference included a wine tasting and silent auction to benefit The Upledger Foundation. Over 200 people enjoyed a variety of fine wines while bidding on some 65 donated items, including resort weekends, sports memorabilia such as an autographed Miami Dolphins football helmet and Orlando Magic basketball, a range of special healthcare products, and tuition for classes and conferences. A live auction featuring lunch and a personal session with Dr. John Upledger highlighted the evening. By the time the gavel came down, two lucky bidders had paid $5,000 each for the privilege.

Proceeds from the wine tasting, silent auction and conference benefit The Upledger Foundation, which was founded in 1987 to develop and explore new avenues of health and well-being. It supports a wide range of programs, including Compassionate Touch, BioAquatic Explorations, and Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder for Vietnam Veterans. The Upledger Foundation also assists with financial aid to patients in need.

UI Presents New Visceral Manipulation Dissection Class

The Upledger Institute has introduced a new class that will allow practitioners to observe the results of their Visceral Manipulation (VM) from the inside out. Called Visceral Manipulation Dissection, the new laboratory workshop will allow participants to dissect and palpate the tissues of an unembalmed human cadaver to dramatically increase their understanding and application of VM.

"I took UI's CranioSacral Dissection class and was quite impressed," says Dee Ahern, RPT, VM instructor and course co-developer. "Many of us have studied cadavers before. Yet I was surprised by the suppleness of the tissue and what you can discover when a body hasn't been treated with chemical agents. When you're working with an unembalmed cadaver you can actually follow your palpations through the tissues."

In the new 2-1/2 day dissection class, participants will witness firsthand how the visceral system responds to their manipulations. Each one will have the opportunity to dissect, palpate and manipulate tissues under instructor supervision to achieve the greatest insights. These sensitive explorations are designed to help therapists discover specific organ structures to better understand how they affect the integrity of the entire body.

"VM techniques are very delicate," Dee says. "So it's hard to tell from the outside sometimes how precisely the manipulations are affecting the tissues. In this class you no longer have to visualize with your mind. You can literally watch the results."

The new class is limited to 12 participants. Call Educational Services toll-free for dates and locations: 1-800-233-5880, ext. 89009.

Dear Dee,

I'm using what I learned in the Visceral Manipulation IB course every day and miracles are happening!

For about a year I've been using CST on my best friend for serious migraines. It's helped her get off the injections she used to take.

Then last month she came to see me again right before her period, which often triggers her migraines.

This time I also performed Visceral

Manipulation on her cecum and ovary. Yesterday she told me she's been headache-free all month.

Today another friend came in. She's been carrying anger about an infidelity and violent encounter with a man for months now. I began to work on her liver, which was "frozen." Even though I released the ligaments, the motility of her liver was "muddy" for awhile and there was some spasming. Then I realized her stomach was ptosed and also without motility. Once her stomach released, both organs began an exquisite dance with each other. I hardly recognized her when I looked in her face!

Another friend had 10 years of esophageal reflux. After 20 minutes of working on her on Saturday, she e-mailed me that she was symptom free. She said she felt nothing but delicious space in her chest and abdomen.

Many of my clients with colon problems are also improving. I work on kidneys and the person is less fearful. I work on the spleen and the person has more energy. I can hardly believe how transforming just a little nudge to an organ can be.

I am so excited about this work! I can't wait until the next class. Thank you for being such an inspiring and enjoyable teacher.

Sincerely,

Elaine

The Upledger Institute Introduces Advanced Lymph Drainage Therapy

Lymph, Interstitial Fluid and Blood

Expand your understanding of blood, lymph and interstitial fluids, including applications to humans, animals and plants.

- Refine your skills in superficial and deep Manual Lymphatic Mapping.
- Discover the significance of the centrifugal/centripetal rhythm: a universal rhythm.

- Study and practice the interstitial fluid release, with applications for edema, articulations, fascia, muscles and skin.

4 Days, 24 Contact Hrs. Prerequisite: Lymph Drainage Therapy III. Tuition: $695.

Monique Bureau Named New Director of Mechanical Link Curriculum

Mechanical Link (ML) developer Paul Chauffour, DO, recently named Monique Bureau, PT, DO, director of UI's Mechanical Link curriculum. Ms. Bureau will manage course development and operations for the ML program, which encompasses classes from introductory to advanced.

A 1999 graduate of the Canadian College of Osteopathy of Alberta Canada, Ms. Bureau holds a degree in physical therapy and a certification in acupuncture. In private practice for 17 years, she continues to live and work in New York City.

Dear Friends,

I have been practicing osteopathic techniques as a physical therapist ("osteo" in France) for the last 13 years. I took a lot of courses in France and in the United States. Osteopathy is a holistic medicine. What makes it holistic is the fact that the practitioner can look for the "primary lesion" and treat it with the smallest impulsion, which will create the biggest reaction. I heard about this theory since the beginning but never saw it in practice until I took Mechanical Link I.

Mechanical Link teaches:

1. How to test the degree of freedom in every joint, ligament, viscera, soft tissue, etc.
2. How to determine which lesion is the "primary" lesion.
3. How to treat this lesion (even if it is emotional).

Each seminar brings new pieces progressively, and covers different areas of the body. I like this technique so much and it corresponds so well to what I have been looking for all these years that I use it 98% of the time now.

When the Immune System Attacks, Ask Why

by John E. Upledger, DO, OMM

I saw Edith*, a 74-year-old woman, only once. She brought with her a diagnosis from the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn.: autoimmune disease of the liver. The finding was made by a liver biopsy. Her blood chemistry reports seemed to support it.

Using my usual CranioSacral Therapy evaluation, I was drawn to her liver and her lower throat in the region of her thymus gland. Her craniosacral system vitality was markedly reduced. I blended with her and, as we became one, I was moved to talk to her immune cells. I wanted to see if I could find out why they were attacking the liver cells.

I asked Edith whether she would allow her immune system components to speak with me using her vocal apparatus. She agreed. As is so often the case, she was now deeply relaxed.

First, I asked the thymus gland if it would be willing to communicate with me. Edith's voice gave an enthusiastic "yes." Then I asked the thymus if it knew why immune cells were destroying liver cells. The thymus once again answered "yes." I asked why this was happening. The thymus said that the targeted cells seemed to be potentially malignant. The attacking cells were macrophages operating under direction from the thymus gland. Then I asked the thymus if it knew why the liver cells being destroyed were abnormal. The answer was "yes."

The Thymus Shares Its Secrets

About four years ago, Edith had received x-ray therapy as follow-up treatment for some malignant growths that had been surgically removed from her colon. One of the far-reaching effects of the excessive x-ray exposure was to change the nature [DNA] of some of the liver cells. These changed cells then divided and produced more cells that were abnormal. This had been going on for a while before the thymus received the information about the existence and multiplication of the changed liver cells. Now it was the immune system's job to clear the abnormal cells from the liver.

Clearly to me, this "autoimmune" disease was the immune system's effort to restore the liver to health. Now if you only look at liver function tests and then study the biopsy materials, it would certainly seem to be autoimmune disease. In this view — as the immune cells conducted their activities during a single slice in time — it appeared that the macrophage cells were destroying healthy liver cells. What the microscope did not show, however, was that the liver cells being destroyed were dysfunctional.

I applauded the thymus gland and the whole immune system for removing these abnormal cells in order to protect against liver cancer. Blood samples taken during this time reflected liver cells being damaged, as indicated by the presence of elevated liver enzymes. These enzymes escape into the blood whenever liver cells are being hurt or destroyed. What's more, bilirubin blood levels were elevated. Bilirubin is a byproduct of the normal degradation of red blood cells, and the compromised liver could not properly do its job of clearing and excreting the bilirubin from the blood. This all led to the abnormal blood tests that prompted the liver biopsy.

"It certainly seems worthwhile to try something as harmless as dialoguing with systems, organs and tissues before taking more invasive steps."

Working in Partnership With the Body

I let the thymus know that, although it was doing the right thing, we also needed to help construct new liver cells to take the place of the abnormal ones being destroyed. The thymus agreed, so I suggested perhaps recruiting stem cells from the bone marrow to go to the liver and develop normal liver cells. I asked if we could communicate with the sternum's bone marrow regarding our plan. Both the thymus and sternal marrow approved.

I explained the situation and asked the sternal bone marrow to send stem cells to the liver cells and become normal liver cells in order to restore normal function. As I asked this I could feel energetic activity under my hand as the sternal marrow agreed to honor my request. I then moved my hand to the liver. In less than a minute I could feel new and different activity in the liver. I assumed this new energy represented the stem cells in action. Stem cells are capable of creating new and compatible cells in almost any tissue they visit. The bone marrow serves as a holding residence for these stem cells while they await their instructions. In the marrow, stem cells also produce all types of blood cells.

New Tests Show Healthy Results

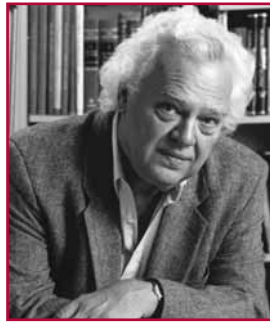

Toward the end of the session I did some simple CranioSacral balancing. Edith came back to the here and now fully aware of what we had done. Subsequently, she had a few follow-up sessions with one of our in-house therapists, who administered general CranioSacral Therapy.

Blood tests done 11 days after Edith's last treatment showed significant improvement in liver function. Edith reported much more energy and vitality. Repeat liver tests were done less than three months after her treatments with us. All were within normal limits.

Had we not established dialogue and rapport with Edith's immune system and bone marrow stem cells, she would have been treated with immunosuppressant drugs to stop the macrophages from "attacking" the liver. The abnormal liver cells would probably have continued to multiply, and perhaps liver failure and/or cancer could have resulted.

It certainly seems worthwhile to try something as harmless as dialoguing with systems, organs and tissues before taking more invasive steps. Of course, it requires more healthcare professionals to sacrifice their egos and to honor the possibility that cells, too, have consciousness. I continue to hold great hope.

Lessons From the Sessions

by Don Ash, PT, CST-D

I had a patient's mom call me one Friday afternoon, frantic because her 21-year-old daughter Angela* was in severe pain in the left wrist, shoulder and neck. Angela was an aide for a summer-school program that included special-needs children, and an 11-year-old girl had become agitated. When Angela tried to calm her down, the girl grabbed her first two fingers and twisted them, causing her arm to flex at the elbow and twist behind her back. Angela fell to her knees in pain. The student was removed with the help of another teacher.

The Limits of Conventional Medical Wisdom

Angela went to an orthopedist who told her nothing was broken, though there may be some ligament damage. He put her in a wrist splint and arm sling, gave her pain medication and told her to come back in a couple weeks. By the following day Angela was in so much pain that her mother called the doctor, who told her there was nothing he could do. He also said the level of pain she was feeling was all in her head and she would just have to get over it.

In desperation, Angela's mom called me to help. Angela presented with a splinted posture, holding her arm and leaning forward. I had her lie supine with one pillow under her head. After listening to her rhythm I worked on the thoracic outlet and hyoid. Her right arm began to twitch. I held her arm from the palm and elbow. It abducted from her side, then extended down below the side of the table.

Suddenly, Angela began to remember the assault. She cried as she felt the fear and pain. There was heat and a pulsing from her arm as it moved slowly at the side of the table. This situation continued for 10-15 minutes then subsided. She sat up remarkably relaxed, and told me 80% of her arm and neck pain was gone.

What the Mind Experiences, the Tissues Recall

Angela and her mom were surprised when I told them the orthopedist had been right. "I think your problem was largely psychosomatic," I said. "We call what just happened a SomatoEmotional Release. Sometimes during a trauma the physical strain and stress is placed in the soft tissue, and the emotions can get placed there, too. That's what happened here.

"The doctor you went to may be good, but he's a surgeon," I added. "He fixes bones when they break. Even if he had known what happened here he couldn't really help because no bones were broken."

Learn to Be a Bridge

Here's my lesson from this session: We need to remember we're at a place in history undergoing a paradigm shift. In Western society we're moving from a century-old allopathic medical model of anesthetizing pain or surgically cutting it out.

Technology has made physicians strain to comprehend new pharmaceuticals and interactions at the rate of some 40,000 new chemical combinations each year. Indeed, surgical advances in computer-enhanced radiography and robotic surgery have made most doctors part-time students just to remain current. To assume that allopathic physicians have the time to develop a working knowledge of complementary medicine is at best a stretch.

"I just finished reading my copy of the IAHP Connection newsletter. I wanted to thank you for the 'Lessons From the Sessions.' They were so wonderful in different ways. CST and the human body never stop amazing me. I am just so grateful to be able to work with this wonderful therapy in my practice."

— Christine Bennett, LMBT
Chapel Hill, NC

As complementary practitioners, we need to be a bridge. One that helps patients cross the barriers to holistic healthcare, and physicians cross a vast canyon to constructive change. We need to treat allopathic physicians with patience, and coexist by example as they heal, grow, learn and move onward in their own very human lives. They're trying to keep up with technical changes as a bigger shift washes away their foundational thoughts.

Biological, chemical and mechanical processes are no longer absolutely repeatable in double-blind studies. The notion of spirit, energy transfer and quantum physics renders the scientific model as we know it increasingly obsolete. We need a new model based on clinical trials, objective findings, and results-oriented outcomes with human subjects.

Fortunately, the egg of CranioSacral Therapy with its SomatoEmotional Release® has hatched. So I support my colleagues in support of local doctors and other practitioners and patients in this wonderful time of change as they struggle to understand its importance.

The UI HealthPlex Clinic Corner

Q. I hear a lot about intensive therapy programs at The Upledger Institute HealthPlex Clinical Services. How are they different from regular sessions?

A. These one- and two-week outpatient programs are designed mainly for patients who could use a period of focused attention to accelerate their healing processes. Often they've simply reached a plateau in their regular healthcare routine and need that extra "push" to get back on track.

Each intensive therapy program features a select team of clinicians comprised of UI HealthPlex staff and skilled visiting therapists. They work with patients in both one-on-one and multiple-therapist sessions to address the specific health concerns of each individual. The programs are limited to six participants whose challenges are addressed individually and through group sessions.

CranioSacral Therapy is the mainstay of these programs. Once the source of a patient's problem is isolated, we often combine CST with other therapies to facilitate the most effective results. These therapies might include SomatoEmotional Release®, Therapeutic Imagery & Dialogue, Visceral Manipulation, Mechanical Link, Lymph Drainage Therapy, acupuncture and acupressure, counseling services and massage therapy.

While the programs generally mix patient groups, they often address challenging health-care concerns, such as brain and spinal cord dysfunction, learning disabilities, autism and post-traumatic stress disorder. We also frequently work with therapists who simply want to go through a "rejuvenation" process to clear out their personal issues and recharge their batteries. They find this often helps them improve their own therapeutic performance.

To schedule an appointment in an upcoming intensive therapy program, please call 561-622-4706.

Thank you for your inquiry,

Sheryl McGavin, OTR/L

Books and Products to Support Your Healthcare Practice

My Grandfather's Blessings

by Rachel Naomi Remen, MD
These stories dispel the common myth of serving others as a sacrifice, bringing the power to strengthen and celebrate life within our reach. (hard cover) $24.95

The Prophet's Way

by Thom Hartman
By melding recent discoveries in science with ancient metaphysical truths, you're given specific techniques and tools to reconnect with life — and recreate both your personal and planetary futures. (soft cover) $12.95

Focusing

by Eugene T. Gendlin, PhD
In a major contribution to contemporary psychotherapy, Gendlin's somatic viewpoint goes beneath the failures of psychotherapy to find a subconscious reality that is both dependable and nonverbal. The author focuses on a human truth that has revealed the strength and self-sufficiency of the individual human being. (soft cover) $6.99

Prescription for Nutritional Healing (3rd Edition)

by James Balch, MD,
and Phyllis Balch, CNC
A practical A-Z guide to self-help and drug-free remedies using vitamins, minerals, herbs and food supplements. (soft cover) $23.95

Soul Stories

by Gary Zukav
Filled with marvelous stories that show how concepts such as nutrition, harmony, cooperation, sharing, and reverence for life express themselves in people's lives. (soft cover) $14.00

The Power of Now

by Eckhart Tolle
Making the journey into the Power of Now means leaving the analytical mind and its false self, the ego, behind. This book takes you into a "higher altitude" where one breathes a lighter air — the air of the spiritual. (hard cover) $21.95

Unraveling the Mystery of Autism and PDD

by Karyn Seroussi
This inspiring and suspenseful chronicle illustrates how one couple empowered themselves to challenge the medical establishment that promised no hope — and found a cure for their child. (hard cover) $24.00

Stress Buster Aerobic Exerciser: Deluxe with Heated Foot Massage

In just 15 minutes, this innovative electromechanical device helps loosen the joints of the knees, hips, pelvis and spine as it enhances blood flow and better liberates nerve trunks. A nice touch before and after therapy. $379 (Special order. Please allow 4 to 6 weeks for delivery.)

Fomentek Bag

This water-filled bag for hot or cold use helps you easily apply soothing thermal therapy to any part of the body. $24.95

Translucent Halite Crystal

This rare crystal is found in The Royal Wieliczka Salt Mines of Poland. When lit from the inside with a low-watt bulb, the high concentration of elements such as copper, manganese and iron create a beautiful hue.

Translucent Halite Crystal-Nebula Collection (10-13 lb. each) $199.00

Translucent Halite Crystal-Astral Collection (8-10 lb. each) $159.00
